

Edward Snowden is a former computer intelligence consultant who leaked top secret United States government information because he believed they were being unethical. When he tried to raise his concerns about it to others, he was ignored. Leaking the top secret United States information poses ethical quandaries of security, privacy, confidentiality, integrity, and others.

One group at a risk is the national security of the United States. I checked the boxes for security, integrity, and confidentiality. I believe it is breaking ethics in regard to the security of the nation and the integrity because it could cause information to get out that isn't supposed to be seen. It could affect society because some information that relates to specific people could get leaked. Finally it could impact laws because the government needs to come up with a way to deal with this situation.
